1. Where was the photo taken?

By reverse searching the image, I was able to find where the statue was located. Since the state is pretty unique and recognisable, I could assure that the photo was taken at Parque das Nações in Lisbon, Portugal.
2. Which year was the photo taken?

Noticing the poster on the right, I found it to be the Tutankumman exhibit. By finding what the date of the exhibit is, it could give me roughly the year the photo was taken since usually exhibitions would promote anywhere from a year to a couple months before they happen. So, I couldn't really make up my mind if this photo was taken either in 2019 or 2018.

Since Google Maps is a more common site than Google Earth when it comes to users uploading their photos and 360 degree captures, I decided to see if I could find anywhere the Tutankumman poster was visible. I was able to find that the poster was still up in 2019.

3. The big poster on the right contained a link to a website. What was the link?

The poster on the left shows the link near the bottom as www.tutankamon.pt. The design of the poster I've put in this doc pretty much matches the one in the reference photo.
